How Well Do You Know Your Fellow Members?

Melody Bakhshandeh – Events Coordinator

Throughout this issue you will find various questions about our members. How many of them do you know the answer to? If you know the answers to most of them you have attended a lot of club meetings and events. If you want to know the answers join us at the meetings and events to find out. You may also find some clues to the answers by reading this newsletter and checking out the web site.

It has been almost three years since my husband joined this club. When he first joined I wanted nothing to do with the club. He managed to convince me to go on a club run and I fell in love with the social aspect of the club. The following month, I was convinced [by Lenny] that I needed to be the events coordinator.

The job has its good and bad points. I would say the good have far outweighed the bad. As the person planning the events it is hard to please everyone, we try to come up with events that will appeal to the majority of the club. Many times I hear that people don't attend the events because their Z is in the garage torn apart for repair or modification. It is not a requirement to drive your Z car to the events. We like for the members to come and have a good time. Whatever vehicle you have that gets you there is fine with us. When you don't make it to the events you miss out on being part of the great stories. For instance, ask Lenny and Sherri Arnoth about their stay at the Sandman Motel in Lake Havasu. When you come to the events you have your own stories to tell. Just ask all that went on July's rally.

I have enjoyed having other people help with the event coordinating. I have to thank Philip Childs for taking charge of the Hideout Saloon run back in April. Dave Platt did an excellent job with the July rally. If you have (Story continued on page 6)

It's my turn again..... the last event was the Santee drive-in. the turn out was good, but not as good as we were hoping.

Sherri baked cakes as she does every year. For those of us on a diet----- DAMN! They were good.

The movies seen were Deuce Bigalowe and The Wedding Crashers. Most everyone liked the crashers. It held my interest for most, but about the last 30 min's something happened and it just fell off a very steep cliff. It went from comedy to an attempt at being a love story.

Deuce on the other hand went from funny to down right funny. Most of the women in the group were not easily amused by this one. From what I can tell about the guys, most of them couldn't stop laughing.

The next event is the Nethercutt Museum. This is always a favorite of mine, because there are a lot more then just cars there.

Hope to see ya out there.....

Front Brake Conversion

Back in October of last year, I decided to make the change from the stock Nissan brakes to the Toyota 4 piston system.

Everyone says it's just "a bolt on installation". So I thought how hard could it be and started searching out the needed parts to do this. Online I found the spacers that are required to be used with the 1984-1985 n/a 300zx vented rotors fab'd by jsk innovations. The rotors I picked up at the nearest parts store and the calipers were found on an 84 Toyota 4x4 pick-up at the local wrecking yard. As a suggestion, I would say get the rigid brake lines for each wheel assembly from your local parts store. After 30 years they don't seem to want to come off in one piece.

Since this conversion required removing the front wheel assemblies, all bearings and seals were bought. I got a hold of a set of stainless braided brake hoses and found myself ready for this "bolt on installation".

I shown a friend of mine all the parts I had to do this conversion. He brought it to my attention that the calipers I had were for the solid rotors, not vented. So out of the kindness of his heart, he donated 2 solid cross drilled rotors.

Day one- not a great start already. The car was up in the air with all the brake components removed, including the dust shields. Something I suggest to aide in cooling. I replaced all the bearings and seals. I installed the rotors, calipers and brake lines. As I was trying to bleed the brake system, the wrecking yard calipers were seized to the point that they were not taking any fluid. Now that the brakes I had were useless to me, I was forced to spend more money and buy them off the shelf.

Food for thought.....I would not suggest that you buy wrecking yard calipers for this reason.

So now when I got the new calipers, all pretty and shinny. I mounted one on the car to find out that the calipers I got from my favorite parts store had mixed up the boxes and gave me calipers for an 88 Toyota 4x4 pick-up. These calipers were for the vented rotors not the solid and the spacers which were no where near the car at this point and time.

Day two- with the previous components off the car I started fitting the rotors and spacers when I noticed a major issue. The rotors were being forced up against the points where the calipers mounted, not allowing the wheels to turn freely. At this point forward, improvisation became a big part in mount this "just bolt on installation". This process started with grinding the wheel side of the caliper mounting point so the rotors would clear. The calipers were offset too much to fit center of the rotor. This was remedied by spacing the calipers and installing slightly longer mounting bolts. The bolts were safety wire to prevent them from coming loose. The brakes were bled and tested on the street and at the autocross/solo2 events. This system has yet failed in anyway. However, there is something you should consider when you decide to do this "just bolt on installation" to your car.

I found out that you need the front calipers for a 1993 v6 4x4 Toyota pick-up. The spacers must be 1/2 inches thick, unlike mine which are 5/8 inches thick. This would have fixed the rubbing issues on my car. Now for the wheels.....they must be 0 offset with the correct backspacing. Any other type of wheel my cause you some discomfort.

My word to you is this, always research prior to installing a "just bolt on installation". There are web sites to search and past newsletters from our club as well as talking with persons that have done this before.

Stay tuned for the up and coming article on the rear brake conversion to my z car.
